

Bidston Lighthouse

Authors Ken & Carole Bryning.

Local History Group 9 went to Bidston Hill. It is the highest point of the Wirral 58.97m above sea level. We were given a guided tour of Bidston Lighthouse by Dr Stephen Pickles and his wife who are the owners.

Bidston originally built in 1771, then rebuilt in 1873 was Liverpool's first lighthouse, and although 2 miles from the sea along with Leasowe lighthouse they were navigational aides, not warning lights. By setting a course between two leading lights straight ahead, mariners avoided the treacherous sandbanks of Liverpool Bay to find the safe Horse Channel. It was the breakthrough in the use of parabolic reflectors by Liverpool dock master William Hutchinson, that made the two light system work, as the Bidston light using coal or oil to fuel the lamp, then had a range of some 2.4 miles. Bidston was also a signal station, using flags as an early warning of approaching ships to Liverpool. A system of semaphores was used between stations from Holyhead and along the Welsh coast to Bidston, who then displayed colour coded flags on the hill for the shipping agents in the port to know of the arrival of their ships and cargo. This was changed in 1826 to a telegraph system. Over the years the sandbanks shifted making the Wirral leading lights obsolete, Bidston ceased operation in 1913.

This was a fascinating piece of Liverpool History and Physics too, which the couple are trying to preserve, with minimum support. The lighthouse is open to the public every Saturday Easter to September, and well worth a visit.
